2017 Statewide January Winter Storms

An atmospheric river, a narrow corridor of concentrated moisture, will take aim at California this weekend with heavy precipitation, high snow levels and soils that are already saturated from recent storms. Moderate precipitation starts 01/07/17, but the brunt of the storm will occur 01/08/17, tapering off 01/09/17. Additional storms are possible 01/10/17 into the week ahead. The majority of the precipitation will fall as rain in the mountainous areas as snow levels rise above 8,000 feet.

- This is forecast to be some of the more significant flooding seen in the past decade. Areas may flood that haven't seen impacts for several years. Use the break in the weather today to prepare. Additional storms are possible Tuesday into the following weekend. Keep in mind that flooding will take several days to recede in some areas after the rain stops.
- Cal OES is holding a conference call with state partners and the National Weather Service (NWS) to discuss the storm forecast, mitigation efforts, and planning between Cal OES Regions, state agencies, partners and stakeholders.

Activations

- The State Operations Center (SOC) will activate on 01/07/17 at 0900 hours until 1700 hours.

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- Moderate to heavy rain is expected today through Monday. With very wet conditions from recent rainfall, the potential for flash flooding is possible this weekend, especially near recent burn scars. Elevations for flash flooding are for mainly below 9,000 feet in the Sierra Nevada which is below the snow line. Street flooding is expected this weekend, as well as streams rising and ponding of water in poor drainage areas.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/wwa\_bc\_cal.php

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Light to moderate precipitation with rapidly rising snow levels is expected today. Very heavy rain and flooding concerns arrive Sunday into Monday. Another wet storm is due Tuesday into Wednesday with continued flooding concerns and significant mountain snow. Light precipitation has been spreading across interior of Northern California overnight as the first of several moist weather systems moves through the region. Snow levels are running at around 1500 feet in the Shasta County mountains and around 3000-4000 feet along the west slopes of the Sierra. Strong warm air advection will occur today, with snow levels expected to rise above pass levels by midday or the afternoon. Light to moderate precipitation is expected with this wave through the day. Breezy south winds are expected to be localized in nature, focusing primarily in the northern San Joaquin Valley and Delta region, possibly extending as far north as Sacramento. The next surge of moisture will be the wettest of the bunch, and should arrive tonight into Sunday. 2 to 4 inches of rain will be expected across the Valley in this timeframe, with 6 to potentially up to 15 inches of rain possible up in the mountains. Flooding of roadways, small streams and creeks, unregulated rivers (such as the Cosumnes River), and some main stem rivers is expected.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A frontal system will affect the region tonight through Monday, bringing periods of rain to much of the region, possibly heavy at times. The best chance for heavy rain south of Point Conception will be late Sunday night into Monday. Unsettled weather will likely continue through the end of next week, with a couple more chances for rain. At upper levels, low will gradually move south out of the Gulf of Alaska. Near the surface, southeast to south flow will prevail through Sunday before shifting to the southwest on Monday. For today, large plume of sub-tropical moisture will be drawn up by the upper low, bringing moderate to locally heavy rainfall to San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara Counties and light to locally moderate rainfall to Ventura and Los Angeles Counties. The plume will gradually shift to the north this evening and overnight, reducing the chances of rain across the area. At this time, northwest San Luis Obispo county can expect 1-3 inches while the rest of San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara Counties receive 0.50 to 1.00 inches of rain. For Ventura and Los Angeles Counties, amounts through tonight will be less, generally between 0.25 and 0.50 inches. One addition to the forecast this afternoon and evening was to add a slight chance of thunderstorms north of Point Conception as models indicate some decent CAPE values and plenty of lightning is already observed to the west (matching up with current CAPE values). There will also be some gusty southeast winds north of Point Conception today/tonight.
